

Video Transcript

My name is Neeta Singh, and I'm the President of the company.

I started it back in 1999. A customer needed someone to find the part, and then I would sell it to them at the best price that I could.

I was inside sales for seven years. Some of my customers suggested for me to do this myself, so I figured if I worked hard, I could do it.

I was born in India, and I was the second child. So in India, it wasn't good if you had too many girls.

So my dad applied for a visa, and he got accepted at Auburn. So when I got ready to name my company, I named it Tiger, but if my father hadn't gotten us here to America, then I would've never been able to do what I did.

Dominion, when we first started with them, you know, they talked about mentoring us. Having a large company like that come and help support you to do a good job was huge.

Companies like Dominion who put a focus on the supplier diversity vendors, the small guys, the women, it really does help to give more opportunities in local communities.

Dominion has done a great job by showing their community that we care about each aspect of our community.

We are a woman-owned business, and they gave her an opportunity. They saw that she could fill an area or a niche that was needed, while also making sure the Dominion supply was met.

It's amazing how the right people came in my life at the right time.

A large company like Dominion supporting us helps us to pass it on, or make a difference in the community one person at a time.